The Journey

Caparrós's journey began in Alaska in 2002. He rode his motorcycle south through the United States, Mexico, and Central America. He then crossed the Darién Gap, a dangerous stretch of jungle that separates Panama from Colombia. He continued south through Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile, and Argentina. He reached the southern tip of South America, Tierra del Fuego, in 2004.

Along the way, Caparrós met a wide range of people, from indigenous communities to farmers, miners, and politicians. He learned about the history and culture of each country he visited, and he gained a deep understanding of the challenges facing Latin America.

He writes with a deep understanding of the region's history, culture, and politics, and he is able to convey complex issues in a way that is accessible to general readers.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part describes Caparrós's journey through North and Central America. The second part describes his
